This works very much like any other HTTP request that a browser sends to get data. So I also really think it should be either your server blocking the domain or more likely the Facebook/Instagram cdn is blocking your server IP.

I did a quick search to see if end users face similar issues on their front. Came across this thread on Facebook.

As one of the people suggested there, changing from "scontent" to "scontent-a" or "scontent-b" could allow people to view the images properly again. So as a quick hack and a temporary solution, I think you could just replace the sub domains and try your luck.
